

Annual Report 2010-2011

Over 30 years helping learners learn

Values

READ believes...

Literacy is essential for children, youth and adults.

Learning occurs most effectively in a safe, caring environment that honours and addresses individual learning styles and needs.

Professional teachers are critical to the development of effective literacy and learning solutions.

Healthy organizations promote diversity, humour and creativity.

Remaining client-focused and implementing sound financial stewardship ensures sustainable organizations.

Relationships founded on honesty and integrity provide a foundation for effective solutions.

Working Principles

Respect: All individuals—students, families, donors and funders, volunteers, community partners and staff—must be treated with respect.

Collaboration: Communities are best served when diverse, committed partners engage in creating sustainable solutions.

Inclusion: We must ensure that those who experience the issue are part of the solution.

Celebration: Literacy successes should be shared and recognized through stories and celebrations.

Accountability: We measure results and hold ourselves accountable for the effectiveness of our work.

VISION

Everyone in society has the literacy skills to contribute to their full potential.

MANDATE

As a vibrant, community-based organization we help children, youth and adults gain literacy and basic skills, including reading, writing and mathematics.

We respond to the emerging needs of our communities and collaborate to make literacy and basic skills accessible to all.

Message from the Chair

The fall of 2011 will mark the 35th year of READ's service to Greater Victoria. During this time of rapid and profound change in our society and our economy, literacy and basic skills remain the most important tools available to help children, youth and adults address issues of poverty.

READ continues to be the only non-profit in this region offering both fee-based and funded services. Yet over the past three-and-a-half decades, the operating climate has changed dramatically: poverty and child poverty in the region have increased; non-profits are held to increased accountability; and costs continue to rise.

These pressures indicate that the manner in which READ has operated in the past is not sustainable. To address the need for change, in July of 2010 the board of directors committed to a three-year transformation plan. READ must become a more outward-reaching, community-based agency that serves more children and youth from low-income households.

We began by offering parents and guardians the opportunity to have a greater voice in the organization. By making membership in the Society part of the program registration process, parents/guardians have a vote at annual general meetings.

To include more people in our organization, READ committed to increasing volunteer opportunities and in 2010-2011 dedicated staff resources to volunteer management.

In 2010 we were grateful to have the opportunity to collaborate with the membership of the Saanich Rotary Club in hosting a fundraising gala dinner and dance at the University Club on October 23. The small businesses in Rotary share our dedication to literacy, as demonstrated by the over 200 items and services donated to the silent auction. Thanks also to the Esquimalt Jazz Band and students of Lester B. Pearson College United World College of the Pacific who made the evening a success.

We recognize that community outreach, involvement and effective partnerships must be our way forward. Emerging partners and funders across our region share our belief that literacy and learning are critical aspects of any poverty reduction strategy.

On behalf of the Board, I extend our sincere thanks to Executive Director Claire Rettie and her team of teachers and staff for the groundbreaking work achieved in this first year of READ's transformation agenda.

Executive Director's Report

In 2010-2011, READ launched the first of a three-year transformation plan. Our vision is to serve more children and youth from low-income households, to provide more service-delivery opportunities for volunteers and to do this work in partnership with other groups in Greater Victoria.

We began the year working with the Community Social Planning Council and Bridges for Women to develop and deliver training to adults in small and mid-sized businesses in the hospitality, restaurant and wholesale grocery sectors. With funding from the Canada-British Columbia Labour Market Agreement we created tailor-made training focused on essential skills development – particularly communication, document use, writing and reading.

For children and youth we launched the Noisy Kids Reading Club in five locations across Greater Victoria. These volunteer-run clubs were offered in partnership with afterschool and out-of-school care programs. Target locations were those where students might not have the opportunity to experience either a reading program or extracurricular activities.

The board committed $30,000 to expand tuition assistance opportunities. These funds, along with the creation of a new sliding scale based on the Low Income Cut-off and the Quality of Life CHALLENGE meant that READ was able to provide 10 months of remedial classes to 77 students.

To guide future directions and to ensure READ develops opportunities that meet real community needs we sought out the advice and expertise of stakeholders from public schools and from community agencies serving children and youth. They told us we need to offer programs closer to the target populations; to focus remedial programs on grades 3-7; that after-school programs must have a tangible product; to work more closely with First Nations leaders and community members; and that getting parents engaged in learning is key.

As we enter the second year of transformation we do so having heard from the community, having demonstrated new approaches to reading engagement, and having cemented new partnerships. In Year Two of transformation READ will use new knowledge plus 34 years of experience to serve more members of the community in practical and meaningful ways.

Programs and Services

Children and Youth

READ provided services to 296 children and youth through on-site (Sidney, Colwood and Victoria) and community locations in 2010-2011, and identified a need to serve more children and youth from low-income households.

We met this need in two ways: by revamping the tuition support process, and by offering programs in the community using volunteers.

The program formally known as Education Assistance was renamed Tuition Assistance to better reflect the funding provided to families, and incorporated into the regular full-fee children and youth programs. A new sliding scale was created in consultation with the Community Social Planning Council resulting in a five-step process which includes a three-month check-in with parents and guardians, and a formal academic post-assessment. The changes allow READ to ensure limited funds help support more low-income households in an equitable manner and that children and youth who receive these funds are in the most academic need.

To support this transition, the Board released $30,000 from the Linden House sale so READ was able to support 77 tuition-assistance applicants. BC Government, Coast Capital Savings, Intact Foundation, the Provincial Employees Community Services Fund, and the Times Colonist's Raise a Reader program also supported tuition assistance students.

Building on past outreach work, READ offered the Noisy Kids Reading Club at four elementary school locations, through afterschool care programs, and one community centre. Volunteers supported these six-week programs. The Noisy Kids Reading Club was initially developed in the summer of 2010 to offer young learners a fun, interactive reading experience. Based on reader's theatre, children read their parts aloud to gain confidence, improve word recognition through repetition and experience the joy of reading.

Adults

Funding for community-based adult and youth and remedial literacy support has decreased over the past three years. Consequently, the number and diversity of programs READ offers has also decreased.

In 2010/2011, READ offered individual remedial sessions and academic assessments to adult learners at its Victoria site.

READ again worked on-contract with GT Hiring Solutions to offer workshops for adults in employment transition. These workshops continued to be offered in the GT offices.

SkillPlus Program

Following the SkillsPlus pilot project offered in 2009, READ partnered with the Community Social Planning Council and Bridges for Women Society to offer more essential skills training from May 2010 to May 2011.

A successful Request for Proposal allowed READ and its partners to provide training to employees in the retail/wholesale/grocery and tourism/hospitality sectors with funding through the Canada-British Columbia Labour Market Agreement.

A total of 39 businesses were contacted, 23 businesses were interviewed and 18 businesses participated. A total of 83 employees registered for the program.
